WHAT THE NATIONAL MEDIA IS SAYING ABOUT THE HAYMARKET PEOPLES FUND

Washington Post

"Through these new foundations, a growing number of Americans have elected to use charitable funds in an attempt to create social change... women's rights, prison reform, legal services for migrant workers, Gray Panthers...."

New York Times

"Haymarket is part of a cooperative of alternative foundations such as ones operating in New York, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Los Angeles and the Pacific Northwest. They are a vital source of support for groups addressing emerging social problems and for supporting community organizations that have active citizen involvement."

Newsweek

"The alternative foundations started in the early 1970's to channel money to activist causes....Besides funds, they often supply personal contact and encouragement to the organizations they support."

Chicago Tribune

"Haymarket represents a different kind of philanthropy. It helps people challenge those who have power...That translates into involvement and commitment to grassroot, neighborhood and social issue groups that can effect real change."

New Haven Register

"Haymarket has a whole new genre of donors who are systematically giving away their money for social change."

Town and Country

"Alternative foundations have aimed their support at direct action projects. The money has been targeted for 'grassroot' groups fostering change...the commitment behind alternative philanthropy continues to be impressive."
